All upside. No overhead.

The Reality for Small Businesses Today

You've thought about offering benefits before. The numbers didn't work, the process was too involved and nothing out there was made for a business your size. So benefits stayed on the list of things to do. Here's what it's costing you:

- Candidates who ask about benefits take the offer that has them.
- Good employees leave for employers who can offer more. Benefits is usually part of what tipped it.
- Your employees are going without coverage. That affects how they show up and whether they stay.
- Every year without benefits is another year falling further behind employers who have them.

The Problem:

Benefits Feel Out of Reach

For businesses your size, benefits have never been a realistic option.

Every time you've looked into it, something got in the way. The cost was too high, you had to commit before knowing if your employees would even use it and there was no one to manage it once it was set up.

So most don't offer anything at all - leaving employees without benefits and losing good candidates to competitors who can offer more.

The Solution:

A Smarter Way to Offer Benefits

The isolved Voluntary Benefits Center changes that equation.
